

A child of mixed-faith parents often struggles with identity. My mother's side of the family came to North America as German Jewish immigrants in the early 1900s. My father's side of the family was blue-blooded American stock in the Methodist church. As a child I knew nothing of salvation in Jesus Christ / Yeshua haMashiach. As far as I can remember no one ever told me about Him until I was near 20-years-old.

When I was in my early 20s I met some Christians through a friend who witnessed to me endlessly how Jesus Christ fulfilled prophecy to be the Messiah of Israel. I asked Him to be my Saviour all those many years ago but felt a great emptiness in my life. I am so glad that our Heavenly Father knows the end from the beginning and has His hand on the lives of those seeking Him.

In 1978 I went to Antigua in the West Indies to teach deaf children and within five days I met the man who is now my husband. Randy was a missionary with a Christian radio station there and in the fifteen years that we were there, he also started a mission work, planted a church and helped start a Bible Institute. We married in 1981 and raised our three children there. I worked with him in these ministries while continuing to teach deaf children.

When we left the Caribbean in 1993 I again felt the great black hole of emptiness in my life. We came to Kingston, Ontario to start and pastor a church work but something was missing in my life. In 2000 I began visiting a chat room with Jews and others who professed Jesus Christ (they called Him Yeshua). There I learned under a rabbi all the answers to questions I'd had all my life about how a man could be God in flesh, about how He perfectly fulfilled Torah, and many other things. My eyes were opened and now I am the most joyful believer in Him and can give my whole life to His work.

I currently am a pastor's wife, a teacher of women and children's Bible studies; a teacher and counselor of women's ministry online, and a teacher of Hebrew in a conference room on the internet on Paltalk. Also in Paltalk I work with FLMILW ministries and Nehemiah Center. I write studies for Strombolis, an e-magazine online on the internet.

How faithful a Shepherd we have! He seeks and finds those who have a hunger to know His truth.

That identity struggle is long gone. I am a new creature because of His Salvation and my life is hid with His in God. He IS my identity.
